Rare birds exert a disproportionate fascination, and many have remarkable histories and uncertain futures. Facing Extinction tells the story of the world's rarest birds, focusing on the 200 or so species listed by the IUCN as Critically Endangered. These range from species like New Zealand's remarkable Kakapo, subject to perhaps the most intensive conservation management of any species, to birds about which virtually nothing is known, such as the Royal Cinclodes. About Facing Extinction. Almost two hundred species of birds have become extinct in the past 400 years, and a similar number today are in imminent danger of following them. The world's conservationists are leading the fight to prevent the demise of these remaining critically endangered birds, with a fair degree of success.
