Why Tibetan monks are setting themselves on fire Since the 2008 uprising, nearly 150 Tibetan monks have set fire to themselves in protest at the Chinese occupation of their country. Most have died from their injuries. Tibet on Fire: Self-Immolation Against Chinese Rule By: Tsering Woeser December 30, 2015 The following is an excerpt from the forthcoming book Tibet on Fire (Verso Books, January 2016), Tsering Woeser's account of the oppression Tibetans face and the ideals driving those who resist. Short, impassioned essay by a Tibetan-Chinese dissident about the phenomenon of self-immolation, correctly describing it as a form of political protest against Chinese control of Tibet and restrictive policies (e.g. police presence, forced Chinese language-learning over Tibetan, population transfers), and this is a desperate method to capture media attention. Tibet on Fire: Self-Immolations Against Chinese Rule is a book by a prominent Tibetan writer, poet and peaceful social activist, published by Verso Books in 2016. The book is a contemporary if not painful introspective look at a major social and human rights problem caused by the forced integration of Tibetan and Chinese societies, and due to empirically repressive policies of the Chinese (PRC ...
